On the Juan de Fuca Trail,
Sometime in Late Spring

There is no answer when I call my son, nothing to break the relentless surf that rises like a wall of white noise, inescapable as gravity, the soundtrack of every west coast hiker’s dream.

No answer at all, just three rings and my own voice telling me to leave a message.
I press the portable against my ear, listen for a sound: something miraculous, a boy at home on a Saturday afternoon.

People pass on the trail. They thread by, look away from me, another yuppie with a toy phone, even here, perched above these breakers, among ferns and giant spruce, man-eating salal.

My son is all distance now, all hands off and sleeping late, coming in at three from a rave,
not a good word to say about anything,
not a word at all,
like someone sworn to secrecy, silent eater, wraith that lives among us, who closes doors behind him so quickly you’d think a demon was biting his heels.

A real parent would have forced him to come on this walk, as I used to force him when he was small,
when he had no choice: shoes, coat,

Let’s go, sport.

The kind of parent who draws a line in the sand then dares his child to cross it.

Terence Young

In this excerpt, the writer presents his reflections on hiking through the wilderness.

from A WALK IN THE WOODS: REDISCORVERING AMERICA ON THE APPALACHIAN TRAIL

Distance changes utterly when you take the world on foot. A mile becomes a long way, two miles literally considerable, ten miles whopping, fifty miles at the very limits of conception. The world, you realize, is enormous in a way that only you and a small community of fellow hikers know. Planetary scale is your little secret.

Life takes on a neat simplicity, too. Time ceases to have any meaning. When it is dark, you go to bed, and when it is light again you get up, and everything in between is just in between. It’s quite wonderful, really.

You have no engagements, commitments, obligations, or duties; no special ambitions and only the smallest, least complicated of wants; you exist in a tranquil tedium, serenely beyond the reach of exasperation, “far removed from the seats of strife,” as the early explorer and botanist William Bartram put it. All that is required of you is a willingness to trudge.

There is no point in hurrying because you are not actually going anywhere. However far or long you plod, you are always in the same place: in the woods. It’s where you were yesterday, where you will be tomorrow. The woods is one boundless singularity. Every bend in the path presents a prospect indistinguishable from every other, every glimpse into the trees the same tangled mass. For all you know, your route could describe a very large, pointless circle. In a way, it would hardly matter.

At times, you become almost certain that you slabbed this hillside three days ago, crossed this stream yesterday, clambered over this fallen tree at least twice today already. But most of the time you don’t think. No point. Instead, you exist in a kind of mobile Zen mode, your brain like a balloon tethered with string, accompanying but not actually part of the body below. Walking for hours and miles becomes as automatic, as unremarkable, as breathing. At the end of the day you don’t think, “Hey, I did sixteen miles today,” any more than you think, “Hey, I took eight-thousand breaths today.” It’s just what you do.

Bill Bryson

1 slabbed—climbed
2 Zen mode—a calm state of meditative relaxation

The short story from which this excerpt is taken is set on a family farm in the early 1900s. In this excerpt, Annie and her sister Sarah are assisting their mother in providing meals to the 26-man crew hired to harvest the crops. Jacob is a member of the harvest crew.

from THE HARVEST

When the boys had taken away the supper, the table had to be set for an evening lunch of coffee, buns, butter and jam. After the men had eaten and gone to bed in the hayloft, once again the table had to be cleared and laid for breakfast and the dishes washed. Annie's mother would set a huge pot of porridge to simmer on the back of the stove ready for breakfast. The men would be up before dawn and were usually in the field by sunrise.

If all went well — that is, if it didn't rain and the machinery didn't break down — the crew would finish here in five or six days and move on to another farm. Last year there had been a three-day spell of rain during which the men were unable to work but had to be fed anyway. Jacob had told her later that if they had to be stuck anywhere, the men were glad it was here where the food was good. At Hildebrandts', he said, the cooking was usually bad and the food skimpy, and they all dreaded going there. Annie felt a little blush of pride at the compliment, but she prayed for good weather this year all the same.

As she was hanging the tea towels out on the line, Annie noticed the thin black line of cloud along the horizon. A heaviness in the air, a breathless silence, puzzled her, until she realised that there were no chickens scratching about in the yard, nor were there any birds singing. The old black dog limped up close to her and whined. Annie stood very still, watching uneasily as the cloud bank thickened and rolled up to blot out the sun. From nowhere a wind sprang up and whipped her skirt about her legs. She turned and ran into the house. The kitchen was nearly dark. Her mother, stooping to put a cake into the oven, caught sight of her as she straightened.

“I think we're going to have a storm. Look out there!” She pointed at the window. The sky was already covered by boiling black clouds.

“Go out and shut the barn door, Annie,” her mother said quietly. “Sarah, close all the windows.”

Before Annie was halfway across the yard, the first hailstones fell. The wind tore at the barn door, but by leaning her whole weight against it, she just managed to close and bolt it. Hailstones pelted her body as she raced back to the house. Her mother was standing in front of one of the kitchen windows pressing a pillow against the glass. She pointed at more pillows lying on the table.

“What do we do?”

“Hurry, Annie, the other window!”

Continued
The hail was coming faster now, a steady clattering against the glass. Annie pressed the pillow to the window and leaned her head against it, gasping for breath. Above the terrible rattle of hail and the roar of wind, she heard, from the parlour, the shattering of glass. How long she stood there she didn’t know. Her arms began to ache, but she dared not let go.

Then, as suddenly as it had come, the storm was over. The crackle of hail against glass ceased and there was silence. Slowly Annie lowered the pillow. The sun, just emerging from beneath the clouds, cast golden slanting bands of light on the desolate scene. A layer of hailstones, some as big as eggs, covered the yard and garden. Not a plant remained standing. And in the field beyond the fence, the wheat lay smashed to the ground. The silence was broken only by the sound of Annie’s mother weeping quietly against the window.

Monopoly

From the hilltop you can see the city, like Monopoly, laid out on a paper board.

Little pieces far below, plastic houses row on row, holding little plastic folk asking how the game is scored.

Little unseen plastic folk driving through the city smoke,
following the boulevards,
taking chances,
taking cards,
driving all across the board
asking how the game is scored.

Little busy businesses laid out on the streets below, waiting for the plastic folk
driving through the city smoke, driving cars with little wheels, moving forward, making deals:
Boardwalk, Park Place, passing Go,
Reading Railroad, B & O,
moving all across the board
asking how the game is scored.

from PEAK

MY NAME IS PEAK. Yeah, I know: weird name. But you don’t get to pick your name or your parents. (Or a lot of other things in life for that matter.) It could have been worse. My parents could have named me Glacier, or Abyss, or Crampon. I’m not kidding. According to my mom all those names were on the list.

Vincent, my literary mentor (at your school this would be your English teacher), asked me to write this for my year-end assignment (no grades at our school).

When Vincent reads the sentence you just read he’ll say: Peak, that is a run-on sentence and chaotically parenthetical. (That’s how he talks.) Meaning it’s a little confusing and choppy. And I’ll tell him that my life is (parenthetical) and the chaos is due to the fact that I’m starting this assignment in the back of a Toyota pickup in Tibet (aka China) with an automatic pencil that doesn’t have an eraser and it’s not likely that I’m going to find an eraser around here.

Vincent has also said that a good writer should draw the reader in by starting in the middle of the story with a hook, then go back and fill in what happened before the hook.

Once you have the reader hooked you can write whatever you want as you slowly reel them in.

I guess Vincent thinks readers are fish. If that’s the case, most of Vincent’s fish have gotten away. He’s written something like twenty literary novels, all of which are out of print. If he knew what he was talking about why do I have to search the dark, moldering aisles of used-book stores to find his books?

(Now I’ve done it. But remember this, Vincent: Writers should tell the brutal truth in their own voice and not let individuals, society, or consequences dictate their words! And you thought no one was listening to you in class. You also know that I really like your books, or I wouldn’t waste my time trying to find them. Nor would I be trying to get this story down in the back of a truck in Tibet.)

Speaking of which …

This morning we slowed down to get around a boulder the size of a school bus that had fallen in the middle of the road. In the U.S.A. we would use dynamite or heavy equipment to move it. In Tibet they use picks, sledgehammers, and prisoners in tattered, quilted coats to chip the boulder down to nothing. The prisoners smiled at us as we tried not to run over their shackled feet on the narrow road. Their cheerful faces were covered in nicks and cuts from rock shrapnel. Those not chipping used crude wooden wheelbarrows to move the man-made gravel over to potholes, where very old Tibetan prisoners used battered shovels and rakes to fill in the holes. Chinese soldiers in green uniforms and with rifles slung over their shoulders stood around fifty-gallon burn barrels smoking cigarettes. The prisoners looked happier than the soldiers did.

I wondered if the boulder would be gone by the time I came back through.

I wondered if I’d ever come back through.

I. Read the excerpt from the memoir Owls in the Family on pages 3 to 5 and answer questions 1 to 11.

1. Details in lines 1 to 8 convey the writer’s feelings of being
   A. insecure
   B. indecisive
   C. constrained
   D. disheartened

2. In which of the following quotations does the writer use alliteration to add emphasis?
   A. “With both owls riding on my shoulders I used to go down the street to where our gang played games in an empty lot” (lines 22–23)
   B. “The next time the ball came near him he made a jump” (lines 27–28)
   C. “Wol was pleased as punch” (line 29)
   D. “Even the tough kids down by the flour mill kept their distance” (line 33)

3. The writer uses a parenthetical comment in line 38 in order to
   A. clarify a detail
   B. include personal feelings
   C. provide a transition between ideas
   D. present the topic sentence of a paragraph

4. Context suggests that the word fly (line 60) is italicized to reinforce the speaker’s feelings of
   A. unease
   B. anxiety
   C. disbelief
   D. frustration

Continued
5. The statements “You never saw an owl look so unhappy” (line 66) and “when people laughed at Wol it hurt his feelings and upset him” (line 71) contain

A. hyperbole
B. alliteration
C. onomatopoeia
D. personification

6. Details in lines 72 to 77 most clearly reveal that Wol learned to fly

A. as a result of being frightened
B. through strenuous effort
C. by trial and error
D. by accident

7. The irony of the statement “You’ll have to educate him, Billy” (lines 88 to 89) lies in the suggestion that Wol should be

A. taught to rely on instinct
B. trained to follow instructions
C. accustomed to a daily routine
D. encouraged to be self-confident

8. In this excerpt, Wol and Weeps are described mainly in terms of their

A. obedience
B. adaptability

15. The central conflict in this poem mainly focuses on the speaker’s

A. sense of loss
B. lack of self-esteem
C. confused state of mind
D. feelings of disillusionment
III. Read the excerpt from the nonfiction book A Walk in the Woods: Rediscovering America on the Appalachian Trail on page 7 and answer questions 16 to 19.

16. In context, the statement “Life takes on a neat simplicity, too” (line 6) most clearly suggests that when hiking in the woods, an individual is

A. unaware of the passage of time
B. free from everyday responsibilities
C. able to grow accustomed to change
D. capable of overcoming obstacles with little effort

17. The idea that “Time ceases to have any meaning” (line 6) is most directly reinforced by which of the following statements?

A. “There is no point in hurrying because you are not actually going anywhere” (line 14)
B. “Every bend in the path presents a prospect indistinguishable from every other, every glimpse into the trees the same tangled mass” (lines 17–18)
C. “For all you know, your route could describe a very large, pointless circle” (lines 18–19)
D. “But most of the time you don’t think” (line 23)

18. In context, the simile in lines 24 to 25 conveys a hiker’s feelings of

A. isolation
B. enthusiasm
C. self-control
D. detachment

19. Ideas in this excerpt mainly focus on how hiking in the woods provides the writer with an opportunity to

A. achieve inner peace
B. explore the unknown
C. discover hidden strengths
D. fulfill the expectations of others
IV. Read the excerpt from the novel Over a Thousand Hills I Walk with You on pages 8 and 9 and answer questions 20 to 28.

20. Details in lines 3 to 8 suggest that for the children, carrying water is

A. a task that provides them with self-confidence
B. an activity through which they gain maturity
C. an essential aspect of their daily existence
D. a daily ritual that they eagerly anticipate

21. In lines 9 to 14, the writer uses a metaphor to enhance the description of the

A. eucalyptus wood
B. bamboo stalks
C. banana palms
D. frog pond

22. In which of the following quotations does the writer use a sentence fragment to add emphasis?

A. “Here was where people who couldn’t pay for water got theirs.” (line 14)
B. “Sometimes even several cans at a time.” (line 21)
C. “Aunt Pascasia showed no mercy toward the day’s dust.” (line 29)
D. “She was six and no longer wanted to be washed.” (line 31)

23. In context, the detail “there was no escape” (line 38) most clearly suggests that when staying with her grandmother, Jeanne is required to be

A. sincere
B. selfless
C. obedient
D. hardworking

24. Context suggests that the word “galled” (line 52) means

A. frightened
B. saddened
C. surprised
D. annoyed
25. In lines 57 to 58, the tone of the mother’s statements is best described as

A. deceive her aunt
B. conceal her discomfort
C. refrain from speaking to her aunt
D. avoid punishment for her misbehaviour

27. Events in this excerpt illustrate that Jeanne regards which of the following individuals with the utmost respect?

A. Her aunt
B. Her sister
C. Her mother
D. Her grandmother

28. The writer’s main purpose in this excerpt is to enable readers to

A. share in the experiences of a young girl
B. escape into the imagination of a young girl
C. appreciate the sacrifices made by a young girl
D. identify with the isolation experienced by a young girl
V. Examine the cartoon Garfield on page 10 and answer questions 29 to 32.

29. In Frame 2, Jon’s emotional state is most clearly communicated by his

   A. eyes
   B. posture
   C. gestures
   D. statement

30. In Frame 4, the humour of Jon’s statement is enhanced by the cartoonist’s use of

   A. metaphor
   B. hyperbole
   C. symbolism
   D. personification

31. Considering the entire cartoon, the ending provided in Frame 7 is best described as

   A. abrupt
   B. surprising
   C. inconclusive
   D. predetermined

32. The humour in this cartoon arises from Garfield’s assumption that the

   A. tone of Jon’s statements is meant to offend Garfield
   B. relationship he has with Jon is based on mutual respect
   C. conflict he is having with Jon will be resolved through compromise
   D. intensity of Jon’s emotions is an indication of his fondness for Garfield
VI. Read the excerpt from the short story “The Harvest” on pages 11 and 12 and answer questions 33 to 37.

33. The imagery in lines 15 to 22 mainly evokes a sense of
   A. calm
   B. instability
   C. foreboding
   D. predictability

34. In line 25, the description of the sky is enhanced by the writer’s use of
   A. irony
   B. metaphor
   C. parallelism
   D. onomatopoeia

35. The description of the “scene” in lines 42 to 45 reinforces the
   A. rarity of such a storm in the area
   B. abruptness with which the storm ends
   C. widespread devastation resulting from the storm
   D. uneven distribution of the damage caused by the storm

36. Throughout this excerpt, Annie’s actions are mainly motivated by her
   A. hope for the future
   B. concern for her family
   C. sympathy toward others
   D. admiration of her mother

37. This excerpt most clearly illustrates how the family’s prosperity is
   A. determined by the extent of their efforts
   B. tied to their being able to adapt to change
   C. dependent upon their being assisted by others
   D. subject to circumstances that are beyond their control
VII. Read the magazine article “Why Don’t Ducks Ever Get the Flu?” on pages 13 and 14 and answer questions 38 to 44.

38. In which of the following statements does the writer use parallelism to add emphasis?

A. “More specifically, duck flu” (line 4)

B. “No seasonal flu, wreaking its quiet toll on aged and immunocompromised humans; no explosive global flu pandemics, carrying off innocent millions” (lines 7–9)

C. “It is senseless to hold this against the ducks, tempting as that is” (line 10)

D. “The various strains of influenza have ‘learned,’ by natural selection, to live peaceably within their migrating host” (lines 13–14)

39. In lines 24 to 28, the writer reveals that when “the celebrated New Zealand-born virologist Robert Webster” (line 20) began his research in 1976, his work was

A. initially viewed with disbelief

B. widely accepted by other scientists

C. concerned with endangered species

D. conducted under adverse conditions

40. Context suggests that the phrase “an uncanny geographical coincidence” (line 30) refers to the

A. discovery of the “duck reservoir” (line 19) by Robert Webster

B. assistance provided to Robert Webster by “the Canadian Wildlife Service” (lines 23–24)

C. research conducted by “biology professor Katharine Magor and Ph.D. student Megan Barber” (lines 31–32)

D. collaboration of Katharine Magor and Megan Barber with “Webster and St. Jude’s colleague Jerry Aldridge Jr.” (line 40)
41. According to the writer, Katharine Magor and Megan Barber produced “evidence for a new hypothesis” (line 36) by discovering that RIG-I

A. is transmitted from ducks to chickens
B. hastens growth in ducks and chickens
C. prevents illness from influenza in ducks
D. has been found in chickens for thousands of years

42. In lines 53 to 59, the writer suggests that advancements in influenza research should be regarded with

A. fear
B. caution
C. pessimism
D. indifference

43. In this magazine article, the writer focuses mainly on research related to how ducks

A. are immune to influenza
B. transmit influenza to humans
C. recover from being ill with the flu
D. learn to tolerate symptoms of the flu

44. The content of this magazine article is best described as

A. biographical
B. theoretical
C. fictional
D. factual
VIII. Read the poem “Monopoly” on page 15 and answer questions 45 to 47.

45. In the third stanza (lines 8 to 14), the poet’s use of words ending in the letters “ing” reinforces the depiction of the

A. growth in size of the city
B. perils of living in the city
C. busy pace of life in the city
D. distances travelled by residents of the city

46. In context, the phrase “asking how the game is scored” (lines 7, 14, and 27) suggests that people in the city lack a clear understanding of how to

A. define personal success
B. learn from past mistakes
C. deal with unexpected events
D. be compassionate toward others

47. The main idea of this poem centres on people’s preoccupation with

A. gaining knowledge
B. pursuing financial gain
C. seeking companionship
D. earning the respect of others
IX. Read the excerpt from the novel Peak on page 16 and answer questions 48 to 51.

48. Lines 1 to 4 mainly serve to provide an introduction to

A. the character of the narrator
B. members of the narrator’s family
C. memories of the narrator’s childhood
D. the central conflict faced by the narrator

49. In lines 18 to 21, the metaphor used by the narrator suggests that he is questioning Vincent’s

A. success as a writer
B. wisdom as a leader
